The Democratic party, as it is at present constituted, is hopelessly divided upon the tariff question, and the developments of this year will determine in a great measure its fate and future usefulness. Of these grand struggles none has yet been fought which more strongly challenges the approval of the civilization of our age than the one now waged by American Democracy for the freedom of commerce and the integrity of taxation. The result of the contest cannot be doubtful. On such an issue the Democracy will ultimately triumph. Commerce will be rescued from the merciless clutches of monopoly and taxation emancipated from the wicked uses of protection. To freedom of person and freedom of opinion, so gloriously asserted in our first Revolution, will be not less gloriously added freedom of exchange. The three, freedom of person, freedom of opinion, and freedom of exchange, accordant and harmonious, will unite in one and together form the noblest fabric of human freedom which on this planet has yet been built. Though differing in the nature of its results and methods of achievement, this great victory for the people, while not less beneficent in character, will be broader in scope than was the triumph of the colonial arms of '76. The latter gave civil liberty to scattered and feeble colonies; the former will secure commercial freedom with the world to a compact and mighty republic. Our Dead Heroes.

[The following simple and touching poem was sent to THE NEWS AND HERALD by a subscriber, as appropriate for publication, as Memorial Day will soon be observed:] Cover their graves with flowers.

Cover them o'er with beautiful flowers, Deck with garlands these brothers of ours, Lying so silent by night and by day, Years they had marked for the joys of the brave

Which now they must pass in the smouldering grave:

All the bright laurels they watched to Fell from their life to cover their tomb.

Give them the meed they won in the past, Give them the honors their future forecast, to be, close to the great national heart Give them the chaplets they won in the strife.

Give them the laurels each bought with a Cover them over-yes, cover them over,

Parent, husband, brother and lover; Crown in your heart these dead heroes of

And cover them o'er with beautiful flowers

And when the long years have rolled slow ly away. E'en to the dawn of earth's funeral day-When at the archangel's trumpet and tread Rise up the faces and forms of the dead-When the great world its last judgment

And heaven at last swings open its gates, And our long column marches silently

Past the great Captain for final review, Then from the blood which has flowed for Crowns shall spring up, untarnished and bright. Then the glad ears of each war-martyred Proudly shall hear the good tidings, "Well

Blessings for garlands to cover them over-Parent, husband, brother and lover. God will reward these dead heroes of ours, And He will cover them over with flowers

"The life of a patriot soldier is never lost. It blooms again beyond the grave, where winter never comes and suffering is unknown. Hanging around the throne of sapphire and gold, a rich garland awaits the coming of him who has died for his country; and when the Eternal Hand has dropped it on his brow, Justice hands the record of his life to Mercy, and turns away, until all that is black and all that is sinful is erased."
